Where's the ocean view?

A Bit of Berkeley History

In the early 1850's there was a small settlement between a stagecoach stop on what is now San Pablo Avenue and Jacob's Landing, a wharf at the end of Delaware Street. It was called Ocean View. The settlement developed into a commercial and industrial center with a grist mill, a soap factory, a blacksmith, an inn and store and a school. Its inhabitants were workers and farmers. It grew slowly around its core at Sixth and Hearst Streets, and was the only center of social life in what was to become Berkeley. Most of Berkeley at that time was farmland. Ocean View was incorporated into the city of Berkeley in 1878.
